This book provides an up-to-date introduction to the fundamental methods related to planning and human services delivery. These methods aid planners in answering the following crucial questions about human activities within a given community: Who are they? (demographic analysis); What do they do? (economic analysis); Where do these activities occur? (land use analysis); and How are human activities connected spatially? (transportation analysis). This book brings these four pillars of planning methods together in an introductory text targeted towards senior level undergraduate and graduate students. Planning professionals will also find this book an invaluable reference.

Clearly explained alternative to Klosterman

By M. Matze

I found this in my school's library after a long search for an alternative to Community Analysis and Planning Techniques by Richard Klosterman. The authors explain the strategies and conceptual material very clearly. While Klosterman relies heavily on equations to explain themselves in exceptionally technical language, Wang and Hofe begin with a holistic, basic approach that sets the foundation for the concept. It really helped me better understand Economic Base Theory and demographic projections.
